Youth Public Art project announced for Camden South

Council is continuing its commitment to youth public art projects, with two sites in Camden South soon to be revitalised.

A professional artist will be selected to lead the project by the end of the month and will work with young residents to design two public artworks for Rotary Park.

Residents will be invited to participate in a concept workshop in early September before the artworks are installed in October.

Camden Mayor Lara Symkowiak said the locally designed art would give new life to public spaces.

“We encourage our young people to share their ideas at the concept workshop in September and use their creativity and sense of community to improve this outdoor area in Camden South,” Cr Symkowiak said.

“This is our third year of hosting public art projects and anticipate that this will be met with just as much enthusiasm and vision,” she said.

Council has completed similar projects in Currans Hill, Harrington Park, Narellan, Mt Annan and Kirkham.
